Its official Japanese name is the HMX14/20. It was designed by Javier P. Zarraga and it's the first of its kind to feature the Varifire Receiver Design, as well as the Serrated Gland. The StA-14 also has the StA-14.5 and the HMX-14/20C. The HMX-14/20 is a late production variant of the Helghast StA-14 rifle. It has a shorter barrel, a different stock design, and a bolt carrier design that is based on the HMB-14. It also fires a different ammunition, which is based on the M7A1 round and has different performance. Contents History An early concept art of a HMX-14/20 from Killzone 2 The StA-14 is the first main battle rifle in Killzone 2 and is the secondary weapon of the Helghast. The StA-14 was designed by Javier Zarraga and was unveiled at an expo in 2002. Before launch, the StA-14 was featured in a magazine article that was a little scuffed by the time it was delivered. It was also featured on an episode of Frantic Assembly. Gameplay The StA-14 is a medium-ranged battle rifle that has a number of differences from other Rifles in the game. Firstly, it has a shorter barrel, which greatly reduces its accuracy. Secondly, it is unable to use ammunition with a variable shell velocity, such as the gauntlet and rocket launchers. It does, however, have the ability to use plasma ammunition, which allows for the use of the plasma vests. Thirdly, the StA-14 cannot be reloaded while equipped with its charging handle. Lastly, due to its difference in size, it has a different reload animation than any other weapon. The StA-14 uses a shared ammunition with the S19 and the Nova. The S19 and Nova are actually more effective weapons than the StA-14, so the only real use for the StA-14 is as a backup weapon in a close quarters situation. The HMX-14/20 is one of the two late-production variants of the StA-14. While the StA-14 was designed by Javier Zarraga, the HMX-14/20 was designed by Eiji Inomoto. Its design is based on the HMB-14 82157476af
